An analytical simulation by Lam et al. [] showed that the sublinear model was accurate in describing the saturation of degradation in aging curves. It was assumed that the change in threshold current was given by the change in the nonradiative recombination current that was proportional to the defect density.

In classical electromagnetism, polarization density (or electric polarization, or simply polarization) is the vector field that expresses the density of permanent or induced electric dipole moments in a dielectric material. When a dielectric is placed in an external electric field, its molecules gain electric dipole moment and the dielectric is said to be polarized.
